Citrus flavanone enhance carotenoids uptake by intestinal Caco-2 cells

Thus, the present data suggest that the citrus polyphenols could act through their iron-chelating properties. This hypothesis was confirmed by the last experimentation demonstrating the role of iron and iron chelator on carotenoid uptake. However, further investigations are needed to specify the mechanism responsible of this interaction.