

Enlargement of the EU

A panorama of fruit imports by the new member countries

With less than a month to go before the enlargement of the EU, Fruitrop provides a panorama of the main fresh fruits imported by the 10 new member countries. The data are the latest figures recorded by Eurostat and cover the 12-month period running from August 2002 to July 2003. Trade operators who wish to establish a position on these markets will see the strategic value of this extremely exhaustive coverage that shows very large scope for progress in certain products. Per capita consumption is some 30 percent lower than in the EU for a fair proportion of the major fruits (banana, easy peelers, lemon and grapefruit) and particularly low for oranges and exotic fruits.

Temperate fruits (pip fruits, stone fruits and berries) form only about a third of the 2 300 000 tonnes imported during the period in question. A good number of these countries, and especially those in the centre of Europe, sometimes have substantial production of this type of fruit (Poland will be one of the three largest apple producers in EU-25).

Citrus and bananas head the list

Banana clearly dominates the range, alone forming more than 25 percent of the total quantities imported. But at 7.3 kg, per capita consumption is still 30 percent lower than in EU-15. In spite of this scope for progress, there does not seem to be an upward trend: the quantities imported started to fall in 2000 (cf. Fruitrop 96) and the trend has been confirmed and even amplified. The volume imported during the period covered was thus down to approximately 550 000 t. This trend should be considered for calculation of the quota to be reserved for the 10 countries concerned.

Citrus fruits also play a leading role in the range with imports at about 800 000 t. However, as for banana, particularly large scope for increase is observed, in particular for orange where the 4.5 kg per capita consumed today is hardly a third of the level recorded in the EU. The difference is less marked for the other citrus fruits but is still some 30 percent. The gap is tending to close for easy peelers thanks to the gradual broadening of the range of late hybrids. Consumption of lemon and grapefruit is very high in Poland, the Czech Republic and Slovenia but extremely low in the Baltic countries and Hungary.

Melon, a strategic fruit for a large proportion of EU importers in the coming years, is already well represented on the eastern European market. It even maintains an astonishing third place, with Hungary being the main supplier.

The family of exotic fruits must be sought right at the bottom of the classification, in which pip and stone fruits—mainly from neighbouring countries—are in the middle. Volumes of pineapple, the leading exotic, total less than 10 000 t for the period in question (less than 130 g per capita). Avocado does not do any better with less than 2 000 t. The other exotics are hardly represented at all.

Poland, leading importer

The countries with the largest populations are obviously at the top of the list. Poland leads, followed by the Czech Republic and Hungary. However, other factors such as income also play major roles. Slovenia thus imports double the volume per capita as Poland, whose GDP is much smaller (40 percent of the per capita GDP in the EU against 70 percent in Slovenia). Conversely, the countries that come last in economic terms, like Estonia and Latvia, are large per capita importers for lack of local production. Here, the range is based mainly on the cheaper produce such as pip fruits from neighbouring countries.

The southern hemisphere is little represented

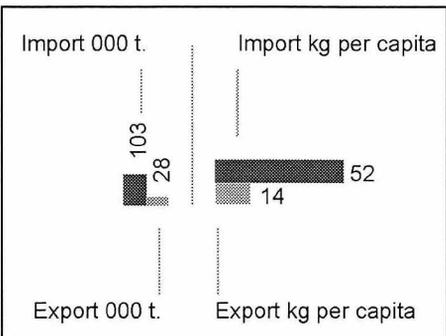

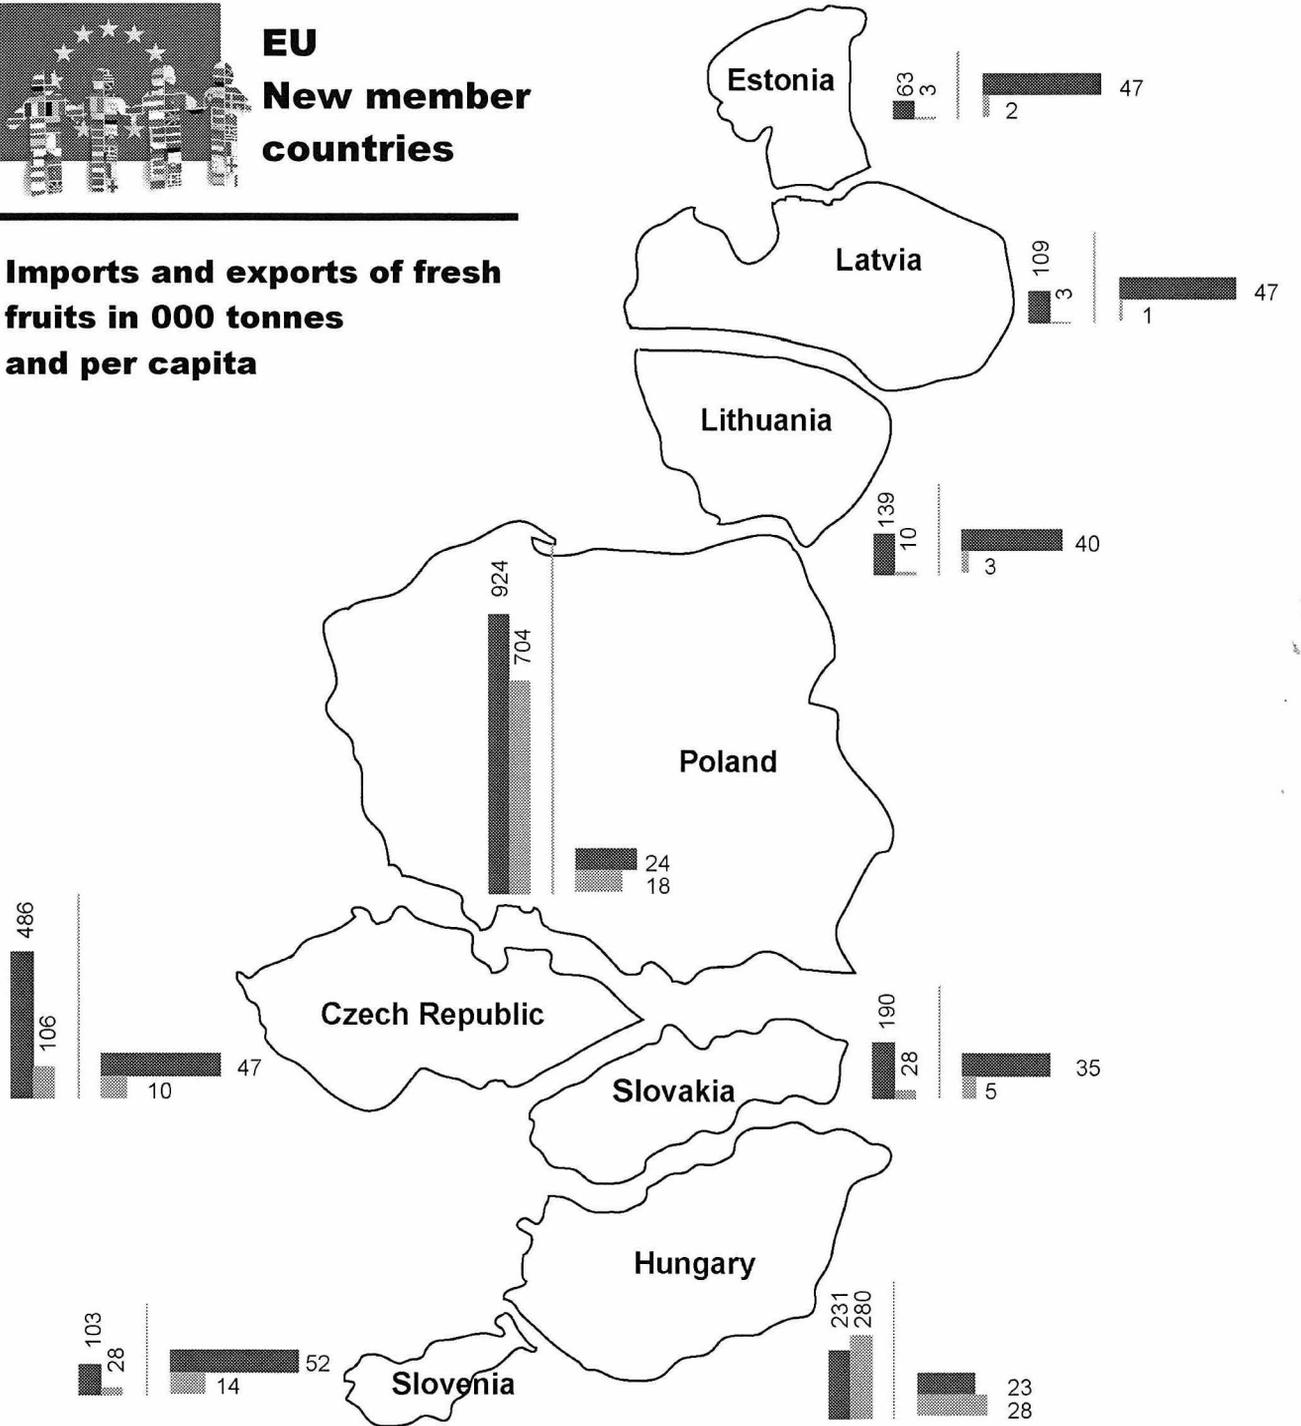

There are few surprises in the list of major supplier countries. Bananas are shipped mainly from South America and citrus fruits from the Mediterranean. Florida grapefruit is only found in Poland. Out-of-season market origins are under-represented for obvious economic reasons. Very modest quantities of pip and stone fruits are imported from Argentina, Chile and South Africa. New Zealand is practically unknown, even for kiwi. Likewise, the volumes of southern hemisphere citrus fruits are modest, except for lemon from Argentina ■
